Teaching System

The professors lecture on the subjects and the students are given a written text of each lecture. Each student studies the text of the lecture and a discussion on its subject is carried on in groups, when the students discuss the themes stressed in the lectures. The classroom is then assembled under the direction of a political 5. officer who is chief of seminary. According to a given norm, questions are asked and discussions are carried on between students. The chief of the seminary tries as hard as he can to create conflicting discussions. He brings in material which helps the controversy. At the end of the seminary session, a general criticism is made by the seminary chief who stresses the good and the bad parts of the discussions which have taken place.
